The pass-r-by would have gathered from his presence there that he was waiting for some one to slip him a glass of liquor.

Shades of a yellow fabric concealed the interior from the view of people passing through Thirty-first street, but the noise of the goings-on there could be heard on the outside. These yellow shades cover the glass windows to the height of an average man's head, but by tiptoeing one can see over them into the room-can, if the two heelers who usually stand on guard in front of these windows will permit him to do so. An attempt, however, might be followed by a sudden attack of paralysis.

SCENES OF WILD DISORDER. Behind these yellow curtains, in a room measuring not more than 17x25, hundreds of nen and women crowd nightly. There are fifteen small round tables in the room, with chairs for four persons at each. These chairs were all occupied last night, and into the spaces between the tables and next to the walls were crowded women and men waiting for seats. Refresh His Memory.

Mrs. Laura V. Appleton's suit against the New York Life Insurance Company for a one-fifth interest in the Plaza Hotel property, was resumed this morning before Justice Patterson in Part III. of the Supreme Court. Real-sestate Broker Charles Mackine was the only witness of the forencon session. He testined that in at his connection with Milliodaire Anderson, the plaintiff's inther, pending the purchase of the Plaza Hotel site, he never noticed any signs of paralysis or that Mr. Anderson ever noted irrationally. On the contrary the old man exhibited remarkable clearness of forestight in predicting advances in value of the preparty.

In his cross-examination by Cel. James, counsel for Mrs. Appleton, Witness Nactice admitted that his evidence to-day differed from that of our years ago, but he explained it was because he had a chained to refresh his memory, and was not due to the fact that he had been subpurned as an expert by the defence.
